

Thomas Maatman, MD, is a hepato-pancreato-biliary research fellow and general surgery resident at Indiana University School of Medicine in Indianapolis, IN. He completed undergraduate education at Michigan State University and obtained his medical degree at Wayne State University School of Medicine. His clinical and research interests include the study of benign and malignant pancreatic diseases, particularly necrotizing pancreatitis.

Nicholas Zyromski, MD, is a hepato-pancreato-biliary surgeon and Professor of Surgery in the Department of Surgery at Indiana University School of Medicine in Indianapolis, IN. He completed undergraduate education at the College of Wooster and received his medical degree from the Medical College of Ohio. He is currently the Program Director of the Hepato-Pancreato-Biliary Surgery Fellowship. His major clinical interest is the care of patients with HPB disease, particularly acute and chronic pancreatitis. His research interests include clinical and basic science investigation of pancreatic disease.